Mohammad Shamsul works as a puppeteer in a prestigious TV show in New Delhi. He lives in a nice flat, wears fashionable clothes and travels all over India. He's been to London and he's visited Buckingham Palace. But his life hasn't been easy.

Mohammad was born in Bihar, one of the poorest areas of India. When he was a child, he lived in a village with no clean water, toilets or electricity. When he was seven, he left school and started work. He's had a lot of jobs: he's made tea and washed dishes, he's worked in a watch repair shop and he's sold plastic water bottles to survive.

One day, Mohammad ran away from his village and went to New Delhi. After living on the streets, he ended up in a charity home. There, he had the opportunity to learn a craft and Mohammad chose puppetry. Soon people recognized his talents and when he was eighteen, he got a job on a TV show.

But Mohammad hasn't forgotten his origins and he's helped to educate people in the slums of New Delhi. Although he ran away from home, his parents have forgiven him and are proud of their son.
